Wellspring Expands in California to Handle Autism Need

LOS ANGELES – Wellspring opens two new offices to handle cases of autism in children in Southern California. Autism is the fastest-growing developmental disorder with roughly 1% of U.S. children affected by Autism Spectrum Disorder. Wellspring has experienced phenomenal success in the Pasadena and Los Angeles area in helping children reach their potential. As the rates of autism cases rise, it made sense to broaden their reach and open facilities in Irvine and Thousand Oaks.

Wellspring recruited dynamic and innovative leaders in the industry to manage each office. These individuals will be responsible for ensuring the office is fiscally sound so clinicians can focus on the treatments for children with autism.

Wellspring hired Kymry Fowler to lead the Irvine office. This office serves children affected by autism in the Orange County area. Kymry has a unique background of business development, operations management and clinical expertise. Her entrepreneurial skills have been proven through the start up and growth of a new product line for a well known Senior Care organization. Kymry has expertise in multi-site management, strategic planning and change management, consultative sales and sales training, sales analysis, market analysis and budget management. Known for her intellect, problem solving capabilities and keen sense of strategic planning, Kymry is a valuable asset to the Wellspring organization.

Wellspring hired Pandora Carey to spearhead the Thousand Oaks office. This office helps children that primarily live in the northwest Los Angeles County and Ventura County area. Pandora has a strong sales background in building and sustaining long lasting relationships, marketing strategy analysis and business development. Parents of Pandora's clients appreciate her responsiveness, professionalism, and her passion of making their child's needs her utmost priority.
